The Oahu Army Natural Resource Program (OANRP) has an opening for a Field Construction/Maintenance paid intern for summer 2011. This three month, 40-hour a week internship will provide an individual with the rare opportunity to work in and preserve some of Oahu's most pristine native ecosystems, while learning to construct and maintain ungulate enclosures and/or other field construction projects -- skills essential to the field of natural resource conservation in Hawaii. Field work for the internship may include, but is not limited to: clearing vegetation along fence corridors using hand tools; controlling non-native plants along fencelines with herbicides; and assisting with fenceline routing, fence material distribution and fence construction. Evaluation, inspection, maintenance and repair of existing fencelines and/or other field structures/facilities may also be conducted. Work will involve hiking, up to ten (10) miles per day, weekly camping trips in remote areas and rugged terrain, possibly under inclement weather conditions, for up to four (4) consecutive days. Access to remote areas will often require helicopter transport. Applicant will be escorted on and off helicopter by a certified heli-crew member at all times. Weed control work may include the use of herbicide. Applicant must be able to work the entire 3-month (12-week) internship period (starting date is flexible), with a work week consisting of four, ten-hour days (7:00 a.m. – 5:30 p.m.), Mondays through Thursdays.

Along with acquiring valuable natural resource management skills and experience, each individual will be compensated for the 12-week internship at a rate of $12.50 an hour. The OANRP offices are located in Schofield Barracks, on the Island of Oahu. Applicants are responsible for providing their own transportation to and from the OANRP offices. Food and lodging is not provided. This internship does not qualify for an international work visa.

All applicants are required to submit:
